A BIT OF WEBSTER HISTORY

WHAT'S IN A NAME? [PART 2]

By: MISSY ROSENBERRY

Last month's Bit of Webster History feature really struck a chord with many current and former Webster residents. Titled "What's in a Name?", it told the history behind several well-known Webster street names: Salt Rd., Basket Rd., Five Mile Line Rd., Shoecraft Rd. and Whiting Rd.

Dozens of readers reached out, many wondering about other well-known road names. So here, drawing liberally once again from Webster History Through the Years, are answers for some of those wonders.

Klem Rd., now known in part for its spacious shoulders, was only 49 feet wide when it was surveyed in 1816. Several families of Klems lived on or near the road, so it was named for them. It was originally built with logs because the bed was low and swampy.

Woodhull Rd. was surveyed in 1816 across the original Robert Woodhull Farm and was named after him.

It's commonly believed that Vosburg Rd. was named after the forebears of George Vosburgh, who lived many years in the old brick house near the corner of Lake Rd. It was actually named after Freeman Vosburgh, a German blacksmith, who built that house.

Drumm Rd. was named after a colorful character called "Captain Drumms." He was reputed to be a former canal boat captain who bought land on the west side of the road.

Herman Rd. was named after Gustav Herman, who owned a farm on the south side of the road opposite Pellett Rd. The road had apparently been nameless for several years.

More information about these roads and many others can be found in Webster Through the Years, by Esther Dunn, published in 1971.

You can check out a copy at the Webster Public Library, or page through one at the Webster Museum, 18 Lapham Park in the Village of Webster.

The museum is open every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday from 2 to 4:30 p.m.
